

Because I Made Her

Because I made her, she is different. She is unique. With love, I formed her in her mother's womb. I fashioned her with great joy. I remembered with pleasure the days I created her. To me, she is beautiful. I love her. I love her smile. I love her ways. I love to hear her laugh and see the silly things she does. She is herself and no one else. This is how I made her.

I made her pretty and not beautiful, because I know her heart, and I knew she would be vain. I wanted her to search her heart, and learn that in me, she would be beautiful.

It would be my spirit that would draw people to her. I made her in such a way that she would need me. I made her a little more lonesome than she would like to be, because I wanted her to turn to me in her loneliness.

I wanted her to depend on me.
